This text refers to question: 8,9 Trading

Trading is the buying and selling of goods. Sometimes services or goods are swapped, this is called bartering. South Africa has a large number of natural resources. These are resources produced by nature, such as coal and metals such as gold and platinum.

When South Africa buys goods from another country, the goods are being imported by South Africa. These goods are called imports. Most of its imports are from China, secondly from Germany. When South Africa sells goods to another country, the goods are being exported by South Africa. These goods are called exports. Most of its exports are to China, secondly to the United States. South Africa exports goods such as fruit, wine, gold, platinum, diamonds, iron and car parts.

Tourism is also an export because people from other countries pay to come to South Africa. There are many different and popular tourist destinations in South Africa, such as Table Mountain and the Kruger National Park. South Africa also hosts popular annual events such as the Cape Town International Jazz Festival, the Comrades Ultra Marathon and the Cape Town Cycle Tour. Events such as these attract tourists from Africa and other countries.

There are many fruit farms in South Africa that produce fruit for export. Fruit such as grapes, oranges, peaches and apples are sold to different countries, especially to colder countries in the northern hemisphere. South Africa has a climate that allows it to grow these different types of fruit. The climate in the south western part of the Western Cape is suited for the growing of grapes, pears and apples, while the climate in North West Province is suited to citrus fruit such as oranges and naartjies. Fruit farms in the Limpopo Province produce fruit such as papaws, mangoes, bananas, avocados, tomatoes and citrus fruits due to the Province's subtropical climate.

South Africa needs to import goods that it does not produce, but that are needed by its citizens. Goods such as oil, electrical items, large machines used in factories, medical equipment and medicines are bought from other countries. Most of South Africa's imports come from North America, Europe and Asia.
