Roles of men, women, boys and girls

The extended family was an important part of society during this time. People did not move around very much; families were large and children had parents, aunts, uncles and grandparents all living very close to one another. As a result, the division of labour was clearly marked. The men took the job of looking after the cattle and fighting off raiders and predators. The men were also skilled carvers and they made tools out of iron. They were skilled hunters and used assegais and knobkerries to hunt game. They also had to prepare the land to plant crops. The men built houses and took part in politics and public affairs.

The boys helped their fathers with the cattle and building huts. They learned fighting skills through stickfighting games. The boys had to be initiated before they could become adults. They had to survive on their own in the veld for three or four months. The women were expert weavers and basket makers. They also tended the crops that the family had planted. They fetched water and firewood. They gathered food such as wild fruit and berries, shrubs and herbal plants, and made beer from the fruit of the marula tree. They also cooked the food and cared for the children. The women made pottery for cooking and storing food.

The girls helped their mothers with chores around the home. At the age of thirteen, they went through initiation, which lasted a week. During initiation girls were separated from the rest of the tribe. <http://e-classroom.co.za/wp-content/uploads/2014/04/EngGr5T2-SS-History-Learner-Book.pdf>, 2014

This text refers to question: 13

Around 2000 years ago, many grain farmers from East and Central Africa moved to what we now call Southern Africa. The new farmers brought many different skills with them, such as farming of crops. They believed the land should be used for planting food. These farmers took three different routes:

- Some travelled towards Namibia and are today the Herero and Ovambo people.
- The Nguni-speaking people went to the east coast of South Africa and are today the Xhosa, Zulu and Sotho people.
- Some went south into the interior (Gauteng, Free State, Limpopo and North West) and are known today as the Sotho people. [EngGr5T2-SS-History-Learner-Book.pdf,2014]

The Lydenburg heads are the earliest known examples of African sculpture in Southern Africa. Two of the heads are large enough to have been worn as ceremonial helmet masks. The other five smaller heads have a hole on either side of the neck, by which they could have been attached to a pole or costume during a performance. They would have been used as part of indigenous ceremonies, dances and rituals.

One of the small heads has an animal-like nose and mouth, which would have been a symbolic importance to the makers of the heads. https://commons.wikimedia.org/wiki/File:Iziko_Lydenburg_Heads_1.JPG

This text refers to question: 19, 20

Using the land

In order to farm, you need land. Land belonged to the community but individuals were given the right to use it. The chief, as head of the community, gave out the land and took it back, though he usually got advice from his headmen before he did this. Everyone had the right to some land but some people had more land or better land than other people. [Source: <http://www.sahistory.org.za/archive/african-farmers-southern-africa>]
